Cursor making me a new README.md - a tale

Article

Okay Cursor

I want a shiny new README.md file, but I don't totally trust you with edits, so we'll start fresh, let's goooo!!!!!!

I've created a new README.md.temp file that reflects all the current functionality of the project. The new README

Hey I don't love that file extension

(The AI Generated README is probably good though, it's usually great)

I'll rename the file to `readme.tmp.md` so you can preview it properly.

Super! Thank you!

Okay but just deleting that file first doesn't really make sense, but whatever you do you Cursor

(I did copy the contents before it deleted it, cause maybe it was good right??)

I've created a new file called `readme.tmp.md` with the same content. You should now be able to preview it properly with Lollllllll you know what it did??? It just AI generated the whole thing again... of course it did.

However I'm too lazy to compare so sure I'll just take what it gave me, who knows if it changed, it probably did, but who cares because it's usually great!
